

THE HAVEN CHRONICLE

VOLUME I, ISSUE 3

CATAGEAN 25, 7410

5 CP

TROUBLING TORTOISE

DIAMOND-SHELL

Jamie Ulrich

A most troubling recent job was pinned onto the job board in Haven – a bounty of 250gp for each adventurer who aids in the defeat of Adama, the Diamondshell.

This creature was first spotted on a voyage by the crew of the Dawning Horizon along the coasts of our New World – a gargantuan tortoise with a shell made of what appears to be diamonds or the mysterious local rock known as asterian quartz.

Tales have been told of local creatures afflicted some sort of corruption by these rocks, but ‘Ursus’ and ‘Heima’ – the previously defeated bear and cougar as they have been named in retellings respectively – appear to be mere insects before Adama.

Worst of all, the Diamondshell is headed right for Haven down the western coast, each of its massive footsteps shaking the ground around it.

Our adventurers have not failed us yet, but will this new, super-corrupted tortoise prove too much of a challenge? Only time will tell.

NEWS IN SHORT

FAERIE MANIA

Starlight Eve celebrations were interrupted by faeries dropping a massive mech and spreading their own brand of cheer. Will we receive more of such strange visitors?

NEW WORLD GIGANTISM

Deep in the Petraklad woods lies a grove that has been entirely petrified – including what appears to be a great elk, not too unlike the massive frog in Lake Kuo-Toa, or the tortoise Adama. What other massive creatures might be found in the New World? Why does there appear to be so many of them here?

FISHY FAITH

Adventurers recently joined their kuo-toa allies on a pilgrimage to their place of worship – old ruins that may have been built by humblefolk who had once travelled to the New World! What more can we learn about our predecessors? And why do to kuo-toa sacrifice to their frog god Gnec? Is it really a god?

FISHY FRIENDS

Polly Prismafeather

Three kuo-toa, once held prisoner by the red-bannered Olobagolla tribe passed through Haven not too long ago. Two left quickly, returning to their village, but the third remained – a member of the dark blue-bannered Klaburagg tribe with no home left to return to.

Kubinu is the son of Klaburagg’s deceased leader Chief Blidoo but has no tribe to call his own. He cannot join another tribe, because to a kuo-toa, their tribe is their life and turning to another tribe is the highest dishonour.

Yet not all is lost for Kubinu, for though they have been taken by the Olobagolla tribe, many of his people yet live and may yet be freed, overthrowing their oppressors and bringing Klaburagg back to strength.

Perhaps a petition to the adventurers of Haven? Or should Haven refrain from meddling in the affairs of our neighbours?

MARKET TRENDS

Garth Umbar

A recent discovery of local silk worms has allowed for production of silk, though it will likely remain a rare commodity for some time.

With the mines slowly getting cleared out, common metals have become less rare, and rare metals can now be extracted, albeit carefully.

The Perchguard has been equipped and set up – demand for armour, weapons, and ammunition have all dropped.

As Haven settles more and more, demand for tool sets has also dropped, alongside demand for containers.

Come have a drink at the

THE UNDERTOW

Finest ales and wines in the New World!

Found right in the center of the Sea Ward – grab a table on the main deck or a room in the hold!